The Mulberry tree planted by James I in the grounds of the hotel

King James I of England, inspired by the successful silk industry in France attempted to start the silk industry in England in 1589.

He ordered a number of mulberry trees to be planted at Oatlands Palace to provide food for the silk worms. However, either because of poor advice or deliberate sabotage the wrong trees, black mulberry were planted instead of white mulberry trees and the silk worms died.

The mulberry tree that now stands in the grounds of The Oatlands Park Hotel was planted in 1953 to commemorate the coronation of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II.
